Each project entry gives you

- What it does and the commercial products it replaces
- Ideal customers and 2-3 business models (managed hosting, vertical SaaS, white-label reseller, setup + support, agency service, courses, kits...)
- Three specific niche ideas, a pricing idea, the white-label effort (Low/Medium/High) and gotchas (license, trademark, regulation)
- Fit 1-5: 5 = host or sell almost as-is · 4 = strong product, needs packaging · 3 = tool, build around it · 2 = library, sell services around it (fit-1 entries were removed)

License key: what you're allowed to do

- Permissive MIT / Apache / BSD: rebrand and sell freely, keep the copyright notice (1,971 entries)
- Weak copyleft MPL / LGPL: share changes you make to their files (129)
- GPL fine as a hosted service; apps you distribute must ship their source (634)
- AGPL if people use your hosted version, you must offer them your modified source (535)
- Check custom, dual, source-available or no license detected: read it before building on it (1,046)

ARCHIVED = no longer maintained, fork it or pick another. ★ ? = GitHub search returned no stats. Not legal advice. Trademarks and logos are never covered by open-source licenses, so always rebrand.

How to turn one into a business

1. Pick a category, then filter by Fit 4-5 and a Permissive or Weak-copyleft license for the most freedom (GPL/AGPL are fine if you host it and publish your changes).
2. Go niche: the generic version already exists; the money is in "X for dentists", "X for churches", "X in Portuguese". Each entry gives you three to start from.
3. Rebrand (name, logo, domain, colours), then add onboarding, billing and support. That is the product.
4. Use the companion CSV files to sort and filter the whole catalog in a spreadsheet.

Before you rely on an entry

- Hardware designs with non-commercial terms are flagged in gotchas; get permission before selling them.
- Reseller supply sources are starting points: check each provider's current partner terms.
- Insurance, lending, travel, health, food and similar ideas usually need a license or registration.
- Some projects appear in more than one category, each with its own angle.
