License key: what you're allowed to do

- Permissive MIT / Apache / BSD: rebrand and sell freely, keep the copyright notice. (1,533 projects)
- Weak copyleft MPL / LGPL: share changes you make to their files. (109)
- GPL fine to run as a hosted service; apps you distribute must ship their source. (576)
- AGPL if people use your hosted version, you must offer them your modified source. (500)
- Check custom, dual, source-available or no license detected: read it before building a business. (1,037)

ARCHIVED means the repo is no longer maintained: fork it or pick another. ⭐ "?" means GitHub search didn't return stats. Not legal advice. Trademarks and logos are never covered by open-source licenses, so always rebrand.

How to turn one into a business

1. Pick a category, then a Permissive or Weak-copyleft project for the most freedom (GPL/AGPL are fine if you host it and publish your changes).
2. Go niche. The generic version already exists; the money is in "X for dentists", "X for churches", "X in Portuguese".
3. Rebrand (name, logo, domain, colours), then add onboarding, billing and support. That is the product.
4. Models that work again and again: managed hosting · white-label reseller for agencies · vertical SaaS · setup + support retainers · a mobile app on top of the open-source backend.

Before you rely on an entry

- Hardware designs with non-commercial terms are flagged in their business angle. Get permission before selling them.
- Reseller supply sources are starting points: check each provider's current partner terms.
- Insurance, lending, travel, health and similar ideas usually need a license or registration.
- Some projects appear in more than one category, each with a different angle.
